1 The food industry is blamed for obesity. Mobile phone operators are challenged to protect teenagers from online pornography. Record companies are attacked when they sue music-lovers for sharing illegal files.

2 Keeping people happy is an increasingly tough trick. With unemployment at record lows, 'companies are trying just about anything' to retain employees...they're getting more money, better benefits and help with personal problems such as child care...

3 Too often students are taught about the past rather than being given the wherewithal to think ahead. But the big fundamental questions need to be put on the table and debated more vigorously in research and in classrooms.

4 Although Nokia's share of the global market for mobile handsets is similar to Nike's in athletic shoes 21 years ago, Samsung has momentum.

5 Almost every fashion label outside the super-luxury brands is either manufacturing in Asia or thinking of it...[but] 'the Asian consumer really does believe that luxury comes from Europe and must be made there to be the best.'

6 Faced with these projections, western societies can either export the jobs or import the workers.

7 The company's shares went into free fall on Wall Street, dropping 45% to 81 cents in early trade...the company said it was entering bankruptcy in order to conserve cash as it struggles with high fuel costs and competition from low-cost carriers.

8 A new research report from Marsh, the world's biggest insurance broker, found that half of European companies did not know how to manage the most significant risks to their business.

9 Airlines and their long suffering customers are reporting a steep climb in incidents...some are caused by problems which are familiar to many regular travellers.
